MERCHANTS HOLD ANNUAL BANQUET

On Wednesday evening, February 1, after the business of the regular monthly meeting, the Daly City Merchants held their annual banquet, and although the occasion was not so well attended as might be wished, those present certainly enjoyed the refreshments served, and a general good time was had until a late hour.

Several visitors were present, among them being Mr. Fred H. Somers, of the right of way department of the State Highway Commission, and Mr. J. C. Haley, his assistant. Mr. Somers spoke at first of the progress of the work of getting rights of way for the widening of Mission street and San Jose avenue, and then at various times during the evening answering numerous questions put by the members and officials present, and as time went on and the atmosphere warmed up and the crowd became good natured and happy, almost everyone had an opportuity to speake what was in his mind. As the writer left at 12:30 A. M. President Andrew Vireno was making an impassioned plea for something which was not very clear at that hour to most of us, but is believed to have been about the advisability of the establishment of a "Credit System" for the merchants of Daly City.

Messrs. Roy Johnson, Fred Collins and F. P. Callsen appeared at the meeting with a resolution favoring the building of a new civic center, and donating the present City Hall for the use of various organizations, and a committee was appointed to work in conjunction with the committees of other organizations in investigating the matter.

Supervisor Albert Witt was present and spoke on various subjects during the evening. He made it clear that he is alert and watching the interests of the people, and that he is well informed on all the conditions existing in the county of San Mateo. His good work as supervisor has already been felt and is greatly appreciated by the people.

Mayor H. H. Smith announced that he is a candidate for the position of chief executive officer of the county, which seemed to be gratifying to his many frineds who were present.

Others speakers present were City Councilman John J. Fahey, Fred Collins, Dr. F. P. Callsen, J. C. Haley and Eldin McGraw.

The next regular meeting will be held on Wednesday, March 1, 1933.

W. H. CLAY, Recording Secretary.

LOCAL VETERAN FIREMEN HAVE INTERESTING MEETING

The members of the Veteran Firemen's Association of Daly City held their monthly meeting on Friday, February 3, at the Veterans' Hall, President James Callan presiding.

The board of directors reported that everything was in readiness for the annual banquet which will be held Saturday, February 11.

Two applications for membership were approved, and the applicants will be initiated at the next regular meeting.

Representatives from the local American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars were present and requested the Veteran Firemen to cooperate in acquiring a permanent meeting place for those organizations. They advocated a plan in which the City Hall should be used as a meeting place for the different civic organizations, and a Civic Center be provided, in the place of the present City Hall, in which would be housed the City offices, library and jail.

The president appointed three members of the Veteran Firemen's Association to work on this project in conjunction with the committees from the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Captain Goldkuhl of tthe Uniform Rank invited all the members to be presnt at the drill on Friday, February 17, at the Veterans' Hall. After the good of the order, refreshments were served. The next meeting will be held on the first Friday in March.

Sunnyvale Air Station Now 70 Per Cent Complete

This was revealed last Monday by Lieutenant Commander Edward L. Marshall, the navy's director of construction, who reported that approximately $3,500,000 of the $5,500,000 appropriation for the air base has been expended in actual contract construction up to the present date.

Work has been proceeding at a rate of more than $300,000 a month for the past nine months, according to the voucher records at the navy's construction office.

LEGION LOYALTY MARCH TONIGHT

This has been a busy week for Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion. Comrades Crane, Tallmadge, Trier, Derungs and Hill attended the San Mateo County Council at Burlingame, Friday, February 3.

The Legion Loyalty March will be held tonight, February 10. All members of Daly City Post No. 410 are requested to attend, and to be at the Woodrow Wilson school at 7 P. M. Remember, this is a national contest between Post Commanders and Adjutants, so let's give Commander Tallmadge and Adjutant Trier all the help we can, and keep the "home" Post of District Vice-Commander R. L. Crane still leading the Department of California.

A joint meeting was held with Greater Mission Post No. 347, at Polish Hall, San Francisco, Monday, February 6. Comrade Phil Solon, of Oakland Post No. 5, was the speaker of the evening. District Commander Knowles presented Daly City Post the National Citation for attaining their 1933 quota before January 1. A fine levied against Comrade Cornell, of Daly City Post, for advertising, was vigorously protested by Comrade Shaffer of Greater Mission Post.

Wednesday February 8, Daly City Post and Auxiliary held a joint meeting with Vimy Ridge Post and Auxiliary No. 411, in their new hall in the San Francisco War Memorial.

Burlingame Post No. 163 invited all Legionnaires to participate in their Washington's birthday celebration, at the Burlingame high school, on February 22.

Comrade "Kingfish" Cornell promises a big surprise at the next dance to be held in Eagles' Hall, Saturday, February 25.

Discussing the disability allowances, Comrade Watson B. Miller, chairman of the National Rehabilitation committee, pointed out that this law was not the responsibility of the Legion. He recalled that it was the present administration which wrote it and forced it through Congress. He declared, nevertheless, that the Legion protested with all its ability against cessation of these payments, particularly in this period of economic distress and human suffering.

In his budget message, the President recommended cancellation of all disability allowance payments, except to veterans who are permanently and totally disabled. Reminding the committee that disability allowances go to the so-called non-service connected cases, Mr. Miller declared the proposal probably would remove from the rolls 94 per cent of the men who receive these benefits.

The American Legion has overwhelming evidence that the $12 and $18 disability allowances of the majority of cases actually provide rent, fuel, and in many cases food. This money is literally all they have to ward off cold and hunger. This provision may not have to be advocated by the Legion, but the Legion will fight with all its strength to prevent any reduction of the allowances.

If those who propose this step had been out in the small communities where mines and factories are closed, where agriculture is stifled, and had been able to see what even these small payments can do under wise administration for little children, they would know that the suggestion amounts to nothing short of family annihilation. It is one thing for well fed men to come before Congress to juggle figures, but quite another to know of the apprehension and terror existing in every town, hamlet and countryside of this land, lest this last bar against cold and hunger may be taken down.

Grand President Pays Visit to El Carmelo Parlor

Grand President Anna M. Armstrong paid her official visit to El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W., on February 1, and it was indeed a happy event. President Ethel Anderson and her corps of officers presented a pleasing picture, their evening gowns of pastel shades blending beautifully with the garlands of hand made flowers artistically arrayed in the meeting hall, and were highly complimented for their perfect rendition of the ritual.

Grand President Armstrong delivered an inspiring address on the projects of the order and expressed her pleasure and appreciation of a perfect evening. Following the meeting a delightful supper was served in the banquet room to the many visiting Grand officers and members present.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Warshawski, of Mission street, are receiving the condolences of their many friensd upon the death of Mr. Warshawski's father, Henry Warshawski, Sr., who passed away the latter part of last week.

SHOW INTEREST IN RACING MEASURE

Interest in the pari-mutuel horse racing bill is increasing by leaps and bounds, as indicated by inquiries coming to the headquarters of the Breeders' Committee in this city. Several letters have been received from the interior, asking for interpretation of sections of the proposed statute.

One sportsman has an idea that the provision giving three per cent of the first money of a purse to the breeder in each race won by a California bred horse meant that the breeder would receive the money only on the first race in which the horse was victorious. The misapprehension may be widespread, so it is explained that in each race there are four moneys, first, second, third and fourth. The racing bill grants three per cent of the first money to the breeder of a California horse each and every time the galloper wins.

A California bred horse may win three or four races in a season, and on every occasion the breeder will be entitled to three per cent of the first money.

Farmers and stock raisers, who are vitally interested in the success of the pari-mutuel horse racing bill, have received news of an appropriation by the House amounting to nearly $100,000 for the purpose of the purchase of horses for the Army. For a number of years the Army Remount Service has had thoroughbred stallions and stock horses of other breeds, stationed at available places for horse owners. It has been a custom to send desirable mares to these stallions and breed the highest type of light horses.

That the stallions of the Remount Service are not by any means of the scrub variety, or culls, is shown by the fact that the Kentucky Derby winner, "Behave Yourself," is one of the government horses. At the hearing in Congress it was pointed out that the farmers and stock raisers of the United States had produced nearly 8,000 colts a year for each of the last ten years by the use of government stallions with the thought that they would be purchased by the Army. The colts, when not sold to the government, afford the farmers the best kind of mount and quite a number were sold for pleasure riding in the parks of the large cities of the country and for polo ponies.

Passage of the racing bill by the Legislature in Sacramento is desired by the advocates of the best type of light horse as it is held that with the money available for the encouragement of breeding provided by the racing bill that the market for riding horses will be extended even more.

FEDERAL INCOME TAXPAYERS

For the convenience of those who are required by law to file federal income tax returns, Deputy Collector A. B. McSweeney, of the Internal Revenue Service, will be at the City Hall on March 3 to assist taxpayers in preparing their returns. No charge will be made for this service. The matter of filing your income tax return should be given immediate attention in order to avoid penalty and interest.

LOCAL BASEBALL PLAYERS VICTORS

The large crowd of Daly City baseball fans that attended last Sunday's game between the local Eagles team and Fazio Tailors were well rewarded with the Eagles' boys in turning in a well earned victory by the score of 7 to 5. Creighton Davies, pitcher for the Eagles, twirled remarkable baseball and though five runs were chalked against him, did not allow a single earned run, three errors at critical moments doing the damage.

Davies struck out eleven batters and allowed but four hits in six innings. Dick Randall twirled the last three innings and kept up the same good work of his team mate.

On the other hand the Eagles put on a wonderful exhibition of hitting in the pinches, connecting for eleven hits for a total of twenty bases. What a thrill that third inning. With the score 3 to 0 against them the Eagles batters, with two outs, started a bombardment on pitcher Marino. Maloney's base on balls was followed with triples by Pierotti, Sloane and McDonald, to knot the score at 3 to 3.

Scotty McDonald again turned in a great game in the field and at bat.

This coming Sunday the Eagles play the Baumgarten Bros. on the Harrison street diamond at 2 P. M.

OLD GLORY POST PLANS BUSY WEEK

Members of Old Glory Post, V. F. W., are advised to be sure and reserve next Saturday evening and join their comrades in the Masonic Hall for the "Hello America" hour. A splendid program has been arranged, and it is hoped that you will do your part by attending.

The regular meeting of the Post and Auxiliary will be Friday evening at the usual hour and place.

If any comrade or sister wishes to travel, here ahe some of the doings of other Posts: On February 14, Post No. 1205, San Francisco, class initiation; February 16, Post No. 2068, San Mateo, whist; February 18, Post No. 2310, Redwood City, dance; February 25, Post No. 2421, Mountain View, hard times dance; February 28, Post No. 2044, Post and Auxiliary joint whist, in Eagles' Hall.

Last Saturday evening the regular meeting of the Five County Inter-County Council was held at the Los Altos Country Club. Old Glory was well represented, as was in fact every Post belonging to the Council. The principal speaker was none other than the veteran's friend, the newly elected Congressman John G. McGrath, who spoke at length on veteran legislation, followed by a farewell message by Commander of the Five County Inter-Council Council, Victor Hunt Harding, who left Sunday evening for Washington, D. C. Old Glory Post wishes Comrade Harding every success in his new work, and know he will be true to his comrades he leaves behind. National Council of Administration member Charles O. Carlston, and Deputy Chief of Staff Rosendorf also responded with short, snappy talks. Those from Old Glory Post attending were Commander Roy Johnson, Fred Collins, Walter Dorn, Fred Linser, J. W. Allen, Dave Raffetti, J. H. Clifton, Bill Ottoboni, Rene Brulez and Davy Jones Cosby. The next meeting of the Council will be held in Watsonville, the date to be set later.

The degree team of Old Glory Post motored to San Mateo on Thursday evening of last week and obligated a class of recruits for Post No. 2068. About thirty-two comrades and sisters attended the Post and Auxiliary meetings from Old Glory.

Attention, Veterans! Remember the Maine! At the hour of 9:40 P. M. on the 15th of February of each year, every member of this organization, wherever he may be, shall come to attention and repeat the following toast:

"At this solmen moment I remember and commemorate the memory of my comrades of the Spanish war who gave their service or life in our nation's cause on foreign soil or hostile seas."

Every Post is urged to observe the anniversary of the sinking of the U. S. S. Maine in the harbor of Havana on February 15, 1898, the disaster that claimed the lives of 266 Americans and formed one of the direct causes of the war with Spain. By paying due tribute to the memory of the heroes of '98, each Post has the opportunity of focusing public attention on the patriotic deeds of those men who made up the most colorful army in the history of the world—every man a volunteer—the A. E. F. of 1898.

Take note of the date of the National Encampment at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, August 27 to September 1, inclusive.

Don't forget to bring in your recruit for February 11. Do your part and we will put Old Glory Post over the top. Get busy!

COUNTY PIONEERS CELEBRATE THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. John Bignotti, pioneer land holders in San Mateo county, celebrated their Golden wedding anniversary on Monday, February 6. Relatives and many friends feted the couple at a banquet in one of the downtown hotels. Greetings and congratulations in the form of telegrams, cards, letters, flowers and various gifts were sent to the honored guests from all parts of the state.

Mr. Bignotti was born in Italy in the province of Lombardy and came to America when only fifteen years of age. In San Francisco he met his bride, then Miss Catherine De Martini, and they were married in the little Spanish church.

Mr. and Mrs. Bignotti have five children and ten grandchildren. The chidren are Mr. James Bignotti, Mrs. August Risso, Mrs. John Depaoli, Mrs. George Lagomarsino and Mrs. William Sweeney, of Daly City.

Elaine Wadiker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Wadiker, of Winchester street, last Friday evening celebrated her thirteenth birthday with a group of schoolmates as her guest.

BOARD OPPOSES CUTTING BENEFITS

The San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday adopted a resolution memorializing members of Congress from this state against any reductions in benefits for veterans.

M. B. O'Connor, San Mateo, asked the board to appoint him justice of the peace to succeed John J. McGrath, who will resign shortly to accept a seat in Congress, being elected to succeed Arthur M. Free as representative of this district.

The County Federation of Improvement clubs and associations, on the other hand, asked the board to abolish the office, claiming it was not needed and that Justice of the Peace Percy Jackson, San Mateo, could take care of the business of both courts.

Annexation of territory to the Woodside fire district was approved by the board.

Members of the board sent a communication to San Francisco officials urging that pottery to be used in the new city jail on the Sneath ranch be purchased from the West Coast Sanitary Manufacturing Company at Millbrae. The action followed a request from the pottery company, which cited that such purchases would benefit county workers.

The weekly payroll on bond issue projects was approved by the board.

A request from newspapermen that County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman be authorized to furnish them with an outline of the programs for board meetings on the mornings of the meetings so that it could be published the current day, was denied. Members of the board said they didn't want the press to know anything about their business in advance.

Mrs. L. G. Owens, president of the San Mateo School Trustees Association, filed a protest with the board against any proposed legislation permitting boards of supervisors to participate in the drawing of school budgets. Mrs. Owens claimed the county boards had neither the time nor the information necessary to take part in the school budget-making.

The board approved the protest and sent letters to Assemblymen Frederick Peterson and State Senator Harry L. Parkman urging them to oppose any such legislation.

Central church, California and Broderick streets, San Francisco, was the scene of a beautiful wedding on Saturday evening, February 4, when Miss Virginia Margaret McKellup became the bride of Mr. Pietro Michael Di Dio. The church was decorated with aspidestras and pink roses. Elder Sherman Nagel read the service at 8 o'clock.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of heavy white satin, made after a model by Chanel, with long sleeves and covered with a long train of white tulle edged with rose point lace. Her bouquet was of bride's roses and lilies of tthe valley.

Mrs. McKelllup, mother of the bride, wore a hyacinth blue crepe Elizabeth gown trimmed with silver lace. Her corsage was of orchid pansies and fresias.

At the McKellup home on Willits street, a reception was held immediately following the ceremony, at which more than one hunderd guests were present.

The young couple will make their home in Daly City.

TEACHERS DISCUSS FINANCE PROBLEM

Following a three day conference in San Francisco on pending legislative measures relating to school costs, the board of directors of the California Teachers' Association has issued the first formal statement to be made by that body, with a state membership of 38,000, since the beginning of the legislative sessions at Sacramento.

In the statement, issued by President William E. Givens, the directors of the association make clear the policy of the association regarding the present economic distress as it affects school budgets. The obligation of those in charge of the schools to do their part "in assisting the people to adjust the cost of public education to necessary reductions of revenues." was emphasized.

A concise analysis of problems of finance and taxation with especial reference to problems of finance and the schools, the statement in full is as follows:

"The Board of Directors of the California Teachers' Association authorizes the following statement setting forth the attitude and policy of this Association with respect to problems of finance and taxation now confronting the citizens of California.

"1. The members of the California Teachers' Association recognize the seriousness of the existing economic crisis and the attendant financial distress of our citizens. The full support and hearty co-operation of this Association will be continued in assisting the people to adjust the cost of public education to necessary reductions of revenues.

"2. The California Teachers' Association is definitely committed to the support of an adequate system of free public education. We hold that the maintenance of such a system is a major responsibility of the state and that the financial support of an adequate minimum program is an obligation of the state.

"3. We urge a scientific, impartial revision of the state's system of taxation in order that inequalities in assessments and tax burdens be removed; that the tax base be broadened and the present excessive burden of taxation on real and common property, as evidenced by long lists of tax delinquencies on homes, farms, and business property, be relieved.

"4. Until a revision is effected, we suggest the following: (a). Curtal to the extent necessary the services and costs of all government. (b). Retain the present constitutional state and county mandatory provisions for the support of schools until the full plan of revision is determined and made operative. (c). Retain the present budgetary control of school finances in the hands of duly elected school authorities, thus applying to the control of the schools the same democratic principles and policies now in effect with respect to municipalities, counties and all other governmental agencies directly responsible to the people for the management of any and all special functions of government.

"We commend the action of Boards of School Trustees for having voluntarily reduce school expenditures during the last two years by more than $30,000,000, thus effecting immediate relief for tax payers. We urge continued reductions by local boards to meet local conditions.

"We reiterate that the present state and county support for education should not be decreased, but that necessary reductions in school support should be made in the individual districts of the state where the greatest burden of taxes now rests."

Many Motorists Visit State During Past Year

It may have been a bad year for business. But the 1932 out-of-state tourist crop for California was better than 1931, according to the facts released by the Department of Motor Vehicles covering cars checked and visitors' permits issued at the department's border "courtesy" stations.

The department's figures, given in the form of a report by Robert E. Stephens, supervisor of the border stations, to Registrar Russell Bevans show a total of 90,989 permits issued during 1932, a gain of approximately 15,000 over the previous year.

The Olympic games was the principal drawing card that brought out the tourists, but those bound for the games were augmented by thousands who came merely to bask in California's sunshine on beaches and in mountains.

The actual check taken by the border men showed the cars coming in carried a total of 406,454 passengers.

The department's stations contact all but about 7 per cent of the cars coming into the state.

In addition to the permits issued, which entitle the motor vehicle owner to operate in California as long as his plates are good in his home state, there were 13,155 temporary permits issued for drivers who expected to stay only a day or two or who were unable to produce satisfactory evidence of registration or ownership.

The biggest month of the year was July, when permits were issued for 16,674 vehicles. June permits totalled 11,998.

Would Have State Build Road to Half Moon Bay

Col. Frederick Peterson, of Burlingame, San Mateo county's assemblyman, announced Tuesday he had introduced a bill in the legislature to have the state take over the road from San Mateo to Half Moon Bay, as a secondary highway. He said he believed the bill had a good chance of being enacted.

In speaking of the plan to have the state take over the highway to the coast. Col. Peterson said residents of every section of the county were desirous of seeing the road from San Mateo to the coast reconstructed. He added a faster highway was needed between the coast and the bay areas as a means of developing the former, and bringing costside residents into bay area markets.

ODDS AND ENDS OF THE WEEK'S NEWS

A new salary scale for city employes and officials, reduced to effect an annual saving of nearly $12,000, has the official approval of the Burlingame city council and is scheduled to go into effect March 1.

Santa Clara, San Mateo and Santa Cruz counties would be hard hit of the legislature should increase the present state tax on gas and electric utilities. This was the statement last Tuesday of I. B. Adams, division manager, Pacific Gas & Electric Company, whose jurisdiction extends over this section.

A consolidated city and county government for San Mateo county rather than a consolidation of the cities of Burlingame and San Mateo was suggested last Tuesday by Horace W. Amphlett, San Mateo publisher, speaker at the weekly luncheon of the local Kiwanis Club.

South San Francisco's city court collected $210 in motor vehicle fines last month according to the reports of Chief of Police Louis Belloni and Judge Edward Farrell. Altogether 32 complaints were filed, three of which are pending. One jail sentence, two suspended sentences and one juvenile case were included.

George Paolazzo, 44, Rockaway Beach rancher, was treated at the South San Francisco hospital Friday for poison. He mistook a bottle of strychnine for a headache remedy, according to Constable S. A. Landini.

Mrs. Pearl E. Kinkade, wife of Walter M. Kinkade, well known Pacific coast newspaperman, died on Saturday night at the family home, 1536 Columbus avenue, Burlingame. Kinkade is an editor with the Associated Press in San Francisco.

When he went to sleep at the wheel of his automobile while driving on El Camino Real near Tanforan, early Sunday morning, G. E. Franklin, Burlingame, was injured after his car struck another.

Following a period of declining health, Leroy B. Hinman, father of County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman, passed away Saturday evening in a Santa Clara county hospital, where he has been since the Christmas holidays. He was 83 years of age, a native of Illinois, and a pioneer of California.

John Melvin Goodwin, well known in the bay region as an inventor and heating engineer, passed away at 4 o'clock Monday morning at his home in Redwood City after a brief illness.

Creation of an auxiliary work relief fund by transferring $44,584 from projects to which it has been voted was offered last Monday by County Auditor Edward M. Stack to the board of supervisors as a solution to the problem of how to continue work relief jobs for the balance of the winter, spring and mid-summer.

Notwithstanding that the state appellate court in Los Angeles ruled that Filipinos may marry white girls, County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman has announced that no such marriage licenses would be issued in San Mateo county pending the outcome of further litigation.

There were fewer marriages in California last year than at any time since 1919, the state department of public health has announced. The total for 1932 was 43,164, or 4,357 below the 1931 figure. Department officials blamed a combination of hard times and the three day "gin marriage" law for the steady decrease during recent years.

With a halt of the county's unemployment relief program threatened because of lack of funds for materials and supervision, the board of supervisors of San Mateo county has under consideration a plan which it is believed will insure continuance of "work relief" for the county's jobless until the end of the fiscal year, July 1.

County Supervisors Opposed to Recall

The San Mateo county Board of Supervisors stood on record last Monday as opposed to the recall move faced by Governor James Rolph, Jr.

Action of the board was taken late Monday on receipt of a telegram from Frank L. Roohr, Butte county supervisor, urging the board to take a stand against the efforts to remove Rolph.

Roohr called the recall "a useless waste of public funds at a time when we must conserve our finances."

He declared the "supervisors should be unwilling to help promote a political feud."

Action of the board was taken on motion of Supervisor Rosalie M. Brown, San Mateo, seconded by Supervisor Albert Witt, Colma.

Wife: "Wake up, John, wake up! There's a burglar in the next room."

Husband: "Well, I've no revolver. You go in and look daggers at him." Tit-Bits.

SIDELIGHTS

Joe Murphy of Hartford, Conn., objects to having other people's animals do their dying on his premises. When a horse belonging to the city collapsed on his lot, and died in spite of a veterinarian's efforts, he sent the council a bill which read: "For the use of my property as a veterinary hospital and morgue on the above date, and the damage caused by the above, $10."

Another radio fan wants the NBC to become a matrimonial agency. She writes: "Will you please find someone who will give me steady work or marry me? I am not extra good to look at but am a willing worker." A photograph was enclosed.

When Jesse Baker, of Philadelphia, was a baseball hero and the home-run king of his day more than a half century ago, his invalid mother sometimes attended the games and cheered her husky son. Jesse died recently at the age of 76, and his mother, who is 101 years old, attended his funeral.

Railroad speed to rival that of the average airplane is planned by the Pennsylvania railroad and Westinghouse for an experimental monorail line between Whitestone and College Point, Long Island. It is expected that the new system will make 150 miles an hour.

A press dispatch reports this strange set of coincidences: Harry C. Kinne of Wilmette, Ill., recently happened to meet Harry C. Kinne of Watertown, N. Y., and they discovered that they look alike, that each has a son named Harry C., Jr.; each has a daughter, Ruth; each has a brother, C. E., and each is a member of his home town council. They are not related, so far as they know.

Writing effusive love letters has long been considered a dangerous pastime for wealthy men. Now, it seems, talk is equally dangerous. Miss Genevieve Keiley of Milwaukee is demanding $10,000 damages in a breach of promise case against Robert Melius, and will offer in evidence phonograph records which she declares will reproduce Robert's impassioned promises of marriage.

It's dangerous to enter one's own home through a window at night, as former King Amanullah of Afghanistan has found out. Having forgotten the keys to his Swiss villa, he jimmied up a window and crawled in. Observing neighbors, thinking him a burglar, called the police, who withdrew only after his recent majesty offered profuse explanations and proofs of his identity.

NATIONAL LOTTERIES

It may not be generally known that an American national lottery was instituted by the Congress of 1776 and that between that date and 1820 at least seventy acts were passed by Congress authorizing lotteries for public purposes such as schools, roads and other improvements.

During the presidency of Washington, Harvard College supported itself in part by a grand lottery, with capital prizes as high as $20,000.

Most European goverments have at some time or another employed national lotteries as a means of raising funds for the public treasuries, and municipal lotteries have been common. Cuba has conducted a national lottery since the formation of the republic.

France financed the war of the Spanish Succession by a lottery which was not suppressed until 1836. England authorized lotteries for harbor improvements and for the financing of the Virginia Company, which founded the early settlements in America, and raised government funds by that means uneil 1824.

Religious and charitable organizations were in some countries permitted to operate lotteries, long after the goverments had abolished them as national institutions. On a small scale such exist in America today in the form or "raffles," which do not differ in principal from the more pretentious lotteries of the past.

But during the last hundred years the trend of sentiment throughout the world has been against lotteries, particularly in the United States, where drastic legislation for their suppression has been enacted.

HERE'S GOOD SUGGESTION TO WOMEN WITH FAMILIES

To mothers who have difficulty in perusading children to take their daily quota of citrus fruits, Mrs. Ceceilia Douglas, of 623 Capwell street, Oakland, offers this suggestion:

Run oranges and grapefruit through an electric juice extractor; mix the juice in the proportion of two parts of orange to one of grapefruit; keep a pitcher of the beverage in the electric refrigerator, and the family will keep you busy refilling it. The addition of ice cubes and a little water makes a spiendid punch for parties.

Albert Vierra, 6-year-old son of John Vierra, of Redwood City, is in Mills Memorial hospital suffering from two broken legs, incurred, the police report said, when he was knocked down by an auto.

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

As is usual at this time of the year, business sentiment is somewhat mixed. Reports from various parts of the country point to a change for the better in industrial activity, always an encouraging sign. Financial observers seem to be a trifle more optimistic. Even the high percentage of commercial failures impress many as having a favorable side—elimination of the weak units in the industrial machine is essential to getting it going again at full speed.

At the recent retailers' convention, it was forecast that sales would drop 20 per cent during the first quarter of 1933, with improvement in the second quarter. A majority of retail authorities believe that prices are gradually being stabilized.

To many, one of the good events of 1932 was a decline in the cost of living of 9.4 per cent. This, too, has its other side—the continued decline in commodity costs is one of the most stubborn influences in prolonging depression. Another barrier to industrial rehabilitation is the growing fear of heavier taxation and the possibility of a general sales tax that will still further damage purchasing power. The state of the public finances continues to be unhappy, with the deficit hovering around the $1,200,000,000 mark. Federal receipts are below expectations, due principally to the lost potency of the income tax.

Consumption of electricity, like car loadings and bank claerings, always plays an important part in the making of business barometers. It is, therefore, cheering to know that since July sales power has been constantly increasing and in greater proportion than the normal seasonal increase. The December advance marked a greater percentage gain than did the increase in the same month of 1930—a year of extraordinary electric consumption.

Latest reports on major industries show:

Lumber—New business continues to exceed production, and in Southern pine district is 13 per cent ahead of last year.

Steel—Fell off after moderate expansion; consensus of opinion looks to improvement in next few months.

Copper—Profitless at present 5 cent price; best side is that domestic consumption leads production.

Wool—Sales close to normal so far this year.

Oil—The drop in crude oil from 63 cents to 38 cents a barrel, in the face of proration agreements, and because of over-production, is one of the most discouraging of recent events.

Shoes, silk and automobiles show definite improvement.

Employment declined .4 per cent in December, with four out of seventeen major industrial groups marking increase.

EUREKA CHURCH KEPT WARM AND COZY BY GAS FURNACE

One of the most comfortable spots in Eureka this winter is Trinity Lutheran church. The reason given by Rev. R. T. De Brau, the pastor, in a letter to the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, is that last fall the board of trustees "combined comfort, efficiency and economy by scrapping the old, mussy and unsatisfactory heating equipment and installing an up-to-date gas-fired system."

To complete the transformation of the attractive litle church, the trustees also put in new lighting fixtures of modernisitc but dignified design. As the pastor explains, Trinity church "believes in employing fully the gas and electric service rendered by the P. G. and E. to insure worshippers the greatest possible comfort."

A customer sent the following note to his grocer:

"Please send six dozen eggs; if good, I will send check."

The grocer, however, was not doing any business on such risky terms, so he replied:

"Send check; if good, I will send six dozen eggs."—Montreal Star.

Homestead Protection Urged

A bill has been proposed in the Legislature by Assemblyman Cobb of Los Angeles, providing that occupation of any property up to $7500 as a residense shall automatically create a homestead. It is said the measure will protect small home owners from eviction or the levy of executions and attachments.

Nematodes Infested Land

N. D. Hudson, assistant farm adviser of Kern county advised the use of apricot rootstock for peach and plum trees on lands infested with nematodes, as it is resistant to this pest. Apricot is not the best rootstock for such deciduous trees where the land is free from nematodes, however, the adviser stated.

Label "Alien Made" Goods

If the bill introduced in the Legislature by Assemblyman Jones of Montebello becomes law all merchandise made in foreign countries and sold in California would have to be labeled "made in a foreign country". The bill would apply to bulk merchandise as well as package goods, and violation of the proposed law would be a dismeanor.

Officers Plan Association

A proposed organization designed to promote personal contact between the peace officers of the various communities, to increase the intercommunication of reports, and to build up a more unified system of crime control in the specified counties is planned by a group of peace officers of Monterey, Santa Cruz, San Benito and the southern half of Santa Clara counties.

Co-Operative Plan Selling Pays

According to figures released recently by the Tulare County Farm Bureau more than half a million hogs have been sold in Tulare county through the California Farm Bureau Marketing Association since its organization in 1918. A total of 576,282 hogs were sold, bringing in $10,823,382.19. While returns for the past year's sales were the lowest recorded, the number sold through the co-operative plan was greater than for 1931 and only slightly lower than the average, in spite of the fact that fewer hogs were raised in the county during 1932.

Tulare Election Date Set

March 18th is the date set by the Tulare City Council for the special election to vote on a group of amendments to the city charter, which include: a new section to the public utilities division, definitely defining the board's powers and duties; changing the city's fiscal year from January to July 1; paying councilmen and utility board members $5 for attending meetings; requirement that the city judge be a licensed attorney, and changing the amount for city schools from the annual city tax levy to not more than 15 cents on the $100.

Growers Use Less Water

With the adoption of the Pay-for-what-you-use policy, by the mutual water company, growers in the Upland district spent less money for water than they expected to do during the past year, and there was a refund amounting to more than $25,000 coming to the ranchers at the close of the year. J. Fred Anderson, agricultural inspector for the district reported that 130 acres were set to lemons and five acres to oranges last year, a record for the past ten years in the number of acres set out to citrus fruit trees.

Ribbed Velvet for High-Style Coats

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

RIBBED velvet for the midseason and early spring coat is a style suggestion which should prove particularly good news to the woman who covets distinction in dress. Th haute monde in Paris are all enthusiastic when it comes to this handsome material, while the best shops here are displaying new coats and suits made of it in both dark and light colors.

When signs of spring stir within a desire to discard one's cumbersome fur coat, comes the problem of a timely substitute which shall measure up in chic appearance to its worthy predecessor. The coats pictured give a highly satisfactory answer to the question. Ribbed silk velvet fashions each of them. Notice how the strips or ribs are worked for the model shown to the left. In the body of the coat the ribs run vertically, thus contrasting the horizontal direction of the sleeves. The scarf collar takes a diagonal movement. An interesting item in connection with this soft-tied collar is that it is attached to the beige wool dress underneath, for this model is really an ensemble costume. This same coat worn with one of the now so-fashionable separate or removable fur neckpieces makes an ideal wrap with most any gown for midseason wear.

This idea of working the stripes or ribs of the velvet in a designful way is stressed throughout the garments which are fashioned of this swagger material. One is especially impressed with this when it comes to observing the high-style resort apparel which the better shops are now displaying. Some perfectly ravishing little sports coats are shown with the most unique yokes and pockets, likewise belts, tabs, flaps, scarfs and cuffs which make a play on maneuvering the ribs of the velvet in ingenious effects by contrasting verticals, horizontals and diagonals.

String color, beige and various tones of gray are favorite colors for these resort coats, which later on will feature for wraps to wear over one's summer dresses. Even more alluring are the sports coats which are made of white ribbed velvet. Of course these are strictly tailored, their only trimming feature being conspicuously large buttons.

In the opinion of leading French style leaders white ribbed silk velvet qualifies as a superb material for the formal evening gown. Just so you may see how effectively it is handled we include a tiny sketch in the illustration of an evening gown which Maggie Rouff creates of white ribbed velour. The sleeves are unique in that they are fashioned of white silk floss to simulate soft feathers.

CHECK WITH PLAIN

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here's how they are combining check with plain this season. The picture happens to be of a beach costume and is therefore made up of washable materials. However, the rule holds good for the newest spring suits which have their swagger coats lined with checked silk adding jaunty scarfs of the check. One piece dresses with bodice or yoke tops of check or plaid are also good style. These often have soft tie fastenings of self material.

Hand Knitted Effects Are Chic for All Sports Wear

Hand-knitted effects are enormously chic for all sports clothes, with the simulated patterns running a close second in popular esteem . . . rusty reds and browns, rich browns and copper colors and some stunning burnt orange shades are new and cheerful under dark top coats.

NEW SPRING MODELS NOW BEING SHOWN

The Worth mid-season collection hints at spring fashion's trend and introduces a new range of colors, but principally combinations of beige, gray, sand, black and white in a delightful manner.

Aside from the fur trimmed long coats and suits shown at this time, Worth has shown a number of models which will have a decided influence on spring fashions. These are the flaring shoulder capes, worn over light wool or crinkly crepe frocks with fur around the bottom.

"Fontainebleau," a black and white crepe satin afternoon ensemble, is already a favorite with Parisian clients. Its bodice of draped white satin, with its curiously shaped puffed and shirred short sleeves of the black, matching the simply cut skirt offer a smart afternoon costume, suitable for many occasions.

A brownish beige woolen costume consists of a simple sports dress and jacket with cape sleeves, the distinguishing feature of which is its trimming of stitching. It is called "Evreeux" and is particularly young and charming.

Bustles Are Back Again, but in Pleats and Folds

The younger generation will have to run to the dictionary, for the "bustle" is back. It was to have been expected, after the return of the Empress Eugenie hats a few months ago and the leg-o'-mutton sleeves.

Madame Schiaparelli is the culprit, for she stepped in where other style creators feared to tread and put bustles back where they once were flouted. Hers are not the same old mattress-like fillers of horsehair and canvas; she makes her bustles out of pleats and folds.

Dress Designers Return to Fringe for Trimming

Fringe is in again For evening it borders capes, capelet sleeves and scarf ends. For daytime it borders round collars. It always matches the color to which it is joined and black fringe or black and white on white are the colors most frequently used.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN WASHINGTON

Clearing Up This Inflation Thing; What It Is and What It Will Do.

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

Washington.—It appears from the inquiries I have had that there is a good deal of confusion as to what this inflation thing is all about. It is equally convincing, on this same basis, that inflation talk is going on everywhere, and its widespread character would indicate that some sort of inflation is going to come out of the extra session of congress that now appears to be scheduled for April.

The unbiased truth is that a very great part of this talk is wholly meaningless, because there are millions of persons who have had no opportunity to inform themselves about it. It is a further truth that many men are talking for or against inflation without a background of knowledge that warrants their discussions. Their views, in some instances, are worthless but they express them and people who have been denied authoritative information are thus being misled.

But what is inflation? What will it do? Why do so many persons think it is advisable or necessary?

The answer to the first requires a detailed statement. The other two questions can be traced directly to the depression, so that "hard times" constitutes the answer.

Records fail to disclose any more precipitous decline in commodity prices than this country, and the world as well, have known in the last three years. By commodity prices, one necessarily must refer to that extensive list of things which constitute the base of commerce and industry. Typical of them are wheat, cotton, corn, steel, chemicals, rubber, coffee or foodstuffs. Everyone of them has suffered a price decline to points as low, or lower, than ever before in modern times. The obvious, and natural, result is reduction of income for everyone having any part in their production and distribution. And the effect carries through to those who work with their hands in the factories of the country, in the shape of wage cuts or part time work or no work at all.

Those factors partially explain why there is so much talk about inflation.

But about inflation, itself? In common discussion, it refers to inflation of the currency, some of which you and I have had the privilege of touching in days gone by. But there is also inflation of credit, which is another and more intricate matter. The two are inseparably linked, however. Inflation of credit is bound to occur when there has been inflation of the currency, although inflation of credit can be accomplished without inflation of the currency. From present indications, the thing which congress probably will do will be to inflate credit more.

Our present money unit is the dollar. It represents 25.8 grains of gold. Then, there is our currency. That is paper money. It has been described as "representing" the gold coin. The treasury officials tell me that most folks mean all of the various kinds of money when they speak of currency. That is not quite true. Currency, nevertheless, represents the gold that lies in the treasury and the possessor of paper money can get gold for it, except in respect of the limited amount of paper money known as silver certificates.

So, actually, when people talk about inflation of the currency, they are talking about increasing the volume of this currency.

Three Methods of Inflation.

So we come to the point. How can this inflation be arranged and what is its effect?

There are three commonly accepted ways of accomplishing inflation. One way is to increase the volume of the money units, or dollars actually available, which means there must be an increase in the gold stock held by the treasury. A second method is to increase the quantity of the paper that represents the gold, without, at the same time, increasing that gold stock. The third plan is by creating a new dollar, a different dollar from that which we have been using. All three methods have their partisans. Each has arguments in its favor, if you assume, believe or know positively, that inflation is the proper thing to do. It may be said just here that experts everywhere know the first method is next to impossible, because there is not enough gold in the world to permit it.

As to the second plan: Some of its sponsors call it a "managed currency," because by increasing the number of paper dollars, the total is supposed to be maintained at a level consonant with prices of commodities. That implies decreasing the volume, as well as increasing it, when the conditions warrant the former course. Yet it causes the question to be asked, "Will the paper dollar then represent the gold which it now represents, or will it be something of a rather uncertain character when people are asked to accept it?"

Insofar as I have been able to obtain accurate statements concerning this second plan, it contemplates at least partially disregarding gold. Those who have spent their lives in handling the federal currency insist that to increase the volume of the paper, without increasing the gold stock, can mean only that the representative unit of that gold is worth less to the people.

On the other hand, a fair representation of the case requires statements to the effect that money of any kind is worth only what it will buy in commodities.

There is yet the third plan. It proposes a new dollar; it would start from scratch, so to speak, and we would be provided with a dollar which we could recognize, if we would, just as we recognize that unit now accepted.

Obviously, this plan is suspectible of as many variations as the weather. This is true for the reason that it would be possible to fix the gold content of the dollar (of which the paper currency would be the representative) on a basis reached. It could be made to have half as much gold as now, or three-fourths, or one-fourth, or any other variation.

Congress could enact a law to set the gold content at any one of those various figures. The result would be a gradual increase in the amount of paper currency outstanding. I say the increase would be gradual because the existence of fifty billions of it would not immediately send that much forth from the treasury. The movement out of the treasury would have to be in response to increased prices of commodities. In other words, money won't just leap the barriers and dash out of the treasury on a dead run. It has to go out of there naturally, which means in the course of business transactions of the nation, or else we do not have a sound currency. Germany has had her experience with rushing money out.

Bringing Up Silver.

In addition to these methods of inflation, there are a considerable number of men in congress, and outside as well, who have been insisting on the greater use of silver. They are proposing bi-metallism. It means making silver just as valuable as gold as the basis of money stocks in the treasury. Senator Wheeler, of Montana, has resurrected the 16-to-1 ratio of Bryan days. Senator Long, of Louisiana, proposes that the treasury shall buy all of the silver that is offered and that this silver shall be paid for by issuing new silver certificates (or representatives of the silver bullion).

There is no doubt that the silver advocates have strong support. They can, and do, refer to the success of silver as a basis of money in India through the centuries, and to Chinese experiences with that metal.

Silver adherents call attention to the limitation on gold supplies of the world, and, in the same breath, to the apparently limitless supply of silver. It is their contention that this type of inflation can be "managed" and controlled to serve the country's purposes. Senator Wheeler said in the senate there was always danger in paper inflation, a danger that it would get out of hand and go too far. Such, he contended, is not the case with his proposal.

Would Raise Prices.

One must look beyond the act of inflation, however, in considering the question which it presents. There is no doubt of the effect, namely, that it will raise prices. It will do that by virtue of its effect on available supplies of every commodity. While opponents of inflation claim this result will be only temporary, advocates of inflationary measures insist the increase in prices will be permanent to the extent that, after the stress and strain of such conditions as now exist have worn off, there will be an easy readjustment to a normal base. That normal base, of course, can be no other than ordinary buying and selling in what we refer to as "good times."

There will be an increase in the prices, also, of such things as securities like stock in corporations. Inflation might possibly develop another boom market, not so bad probably as the 1929 debacle, but higher levels for virtually all of the quotations. The effect on bonds and possibly on preferred stock in corporations seems likely to be the reverse from that on common stock. The reason is obvious. Bonds and preferred stock have a fixed amount to be paid to their holders. Interest is paid on the bonds and dividends on the stocks. Their holders, therefore, get that amount whether the dollar which they are paid is worth 25.8 grains of gold, or only half as much.

Similarly, wages will be affected. The wage earner who is paid $50 a month will continue to get $50, but that sum will not purchase as much of the higher priced commodities as it now does, or as it does in normal times.

Advocates of inflation point to the benefit which farmers will receive from the increased volume of currency in whatever way it is obtained. Higher prices, say the inflation supporters, when they have been received by the farmer for his wheat, his cotton, his corn, or his live stock, will enable him to buy more from the industrial plants who need the farmer's trade.

Opponents of inflation admit, as true, that the farmer will receive higher prices for his products, but they argue he will be at a disadvantage rather than an advantage. For, say the opponents, prices are not going to be stable when the currency is inflated. They add the further argument that, while the farmer is receiving more for his products, he will be called upon to pay higher prices for everything he buys. It must be remembered, too, that labor costs enter into the manufacture and labor, paid in the inflated dollar, may not constitute anything like a normal market, according to the opposition views.

UNDESERVED CRITICISM AND ABUSE

The movement for the recall of Governor Rolph should not receive support from those having the good of California at heart. It is sponsored by men who having failed to get in with, are trying to get even with the Governor.

Placed before the electors, the recall would cost approximately a half million dollars, with no good result. It would thow the State into turmoil and would distract the people.

This is a time when the best efforts of all in public office should be devoted to the benefit of all and to a helpful solution of the vexatious problems affecting all. If this proposition should go before the people, those responsible for it will be repudiated, not the Governor. Governor Rolph is suffering from criticism and abuse not deserved. He has had to face conditions no other Governor has been confronted with—depleted revenues—a general distressful economic situation never before experienced in the State or Nation—the necessity of expending millions of dollars to provide employment for thousands of suffering fellow citizens.

In coping with these emergencies, the Legislature and the people have co-operated with and approved of his actions. No good would result even if the recall was accomplished. What guaranty have the people that the man chosen could improve the situation or accomplish better results for the State. This is not the time to attempt a recall. Governor Rolph is a loyal Californian; has been a public spirited citizen. No one doubts that he has at heart the good of his native State. He is suffering today because of acts of others, and his big kind-heartedness has induced criticism. But James Rolph, the man, does not deserve this attack, and the citizenship of our great State should not countenance it.

A New York man, thought dead, is said to have been restored by liquor. If it had been the other way around it wouldn't have been news.

'SHARE THOSE JOBS'—CHEAPER THAN CHARITY

A total of $640,000,000 is to be mobilized by Germany during 1933 to provide jobs for as many as possible of the nation's 5,600,000 unemployed. The leader of the movement is to be given wide powers in order to free the program from bureaucratic red tape. A great part of the money is to be spent on major public works.

The United States government has also thrown its resources into the fight against unemployment and has produced some excellent results. But it is probable that Germany will discover what we have—that government relief projects can be of but temporary benefit. The The solution for aggravated unemployment lies to a much greater extent in such a movement as the present "share the work" drive. Here is an endeavor that strikes at the root of the matter—turn one job into two or more.

To "share the work" costs nothing and "providing jobs is always cheaper than charity," not to mention the social profits accruing therefrom. Its influence on purchasing power is tremendous, aside from what is does to prevent and overcome distress and poverty. It is a recognition of the fact that all must co-operate to defeat depression, and must not lose sight of the general welfare which always precedes individual welfare. The fact that the movement is rapidly growing, in large businesses and small, puts America at the forefront of the nations in solving the unemployment problems of today.

OUR INTEREST IN DEBTS

A committee of economists investigating the foreign debt question, after a detailed analysis of inter-governmental debts, says in part:

"A reasonable adjustment of inter-governmental debts promises far greater material benefits to the American people than the direct income which would be received if payment could be made in full. The installment due this fiscal year on the debts amounts to about $280,000,000, or $2.24 per capita in terms of the American population. Large as this total may seem, it is small in comparison with the gains which would follow even a partial return to the prosperity of three years ago. An increase of one per cent in our annual income over the present low levels would amount to more than twice the current annual installment on the war debts.

"Any action on our part which would maintain the solvency of Europe and revive its power to buy American goods would be a stimulus to our own trade and renewed prosperity at home. A readjustment of these debts in the light of present world conditions suited both to the capacity of our debtors to pay, and to our own ability to receive—especially if it involved favorable concessions to American trade—would go far toward the stimulation of world-wide and American economic recovery."

THE CRIME PROBLEM

According to a report recently given out, the city of Quebec, with a population of approximately 100,000, was the scene of only one murder in a whole year.

In the United States there are on an average approximately ten murders each year out of each 100,000 of population, while in the cities of Memphis, Jacksonville and Birmingham the annual rate during the past ten years has averaged nearly sixty murders per 100,000, or sixty times that of Quebec.

In spite of the earnest efforts of sociologists and publicists to determine the cause and suggest a remedy for the deplorable crime situation, no appreciable headway has been made in that direction.

Attempts to explain crime as an aftermath of the war fall flat when it is considered that the homicide rate in England, Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and other English-speaking countries averages only about one-tenth that of the United States, yet all these were in the war from beginning to end, and suffered from its effects in every way immeasurably more than we did.

It is declared by a recent writer that only one murderer out of 160 is executed in New York, while 70 out of a hundred are hanged in London. This may have something to do with our high murder rate.

BABY NOW HAS A CHANCE

In the long list of accomplishments to the credit of modern medical science, perhaps none has greater significance than the success attained in the reduction of childhood deaths.

A recent writer recalls that Queen Anne of England, born in 1664, bore seventeen children, only one of whom lived more than a year, and he died at the age of 11. Now large families of children often mature without a death.

Through medical education and the treatment of early defects the child's chance of reaching maturity has been greatly increased, especially during the last half century. The lengthened average span of human life which now prevails is largely due to the reduction of mortality among infants.

In addition to regularly employed physicians and nurses of public health units, thousands of volunteer workers are co-operating in the task of saving babies' lives. In Kansas City alone it is said that 3,000 of these volunteers aided in this movement last year.

For their effective efforts in this and other directions looking to the preservation of human life the medical profession and those co-operating are entitled to the highest praise.

Most statesmen's idea of farm relief is to give the farmer a chance to plaster another mortgage on his place.

TO FIRE, A BAD NEW YEAR

Let's make 1933 a tough year for fire! During the past dozen or so years fire has had a very prosperous time. It has claimed an annual average of ten thousand lives and property valued at a half billion dollars. It has ruined thousands of bsuinesses, incinerated farmers' crops, livestock, and in some instances brought the progress of whole communities to a stop. It has thrown armies of men out of work, inflated tax bills, and has cost every one of us a good many dollars we could have used for constructive purposes.

Now it's time that we give fire what is coming to it—a bad year. That can be done if we adopt the attitude that fire prevention, and a knowledge of fire hazards, is an inescapable personal responisbility. It is something we owe to our neighbors, to our families, to ourselves.

Take a look around your property. Clean up the basement, the garage, the attic. Have an expert inspect the wiring. When you build or make improvements, see that the work is done in accord with standards laid down by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

We can give fire a bad year in 1933. But it will take the aid of every citizen.

Furnace heat for homes without a basement

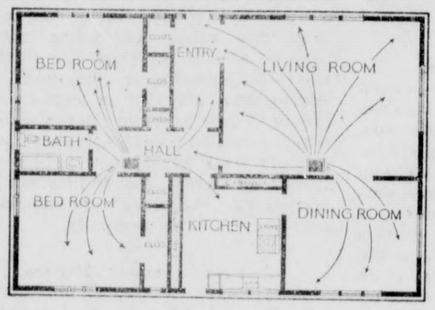
GAS HEATING EQUIPMENT MAKES THIS POSSIBLE

IN too many homes a heating system that gives circulated heat has been neglected. Because excavation for a basement is costly or because homes have been built so that no basement has been possible, stoves and fireplaces have become the heating system for these homes.

Today gas floor furnaces change the whole situation for homes without a basement and homes that can never have a basement. These efficient heating devices, capable of keeping homes of from four to seven rooms to "Comfort Zone" warmth, can be quickly and easily installed.

Gas floor furnaces have established a record for economy in supplying small homes with furnace heat. The local office of the P. G. & E. can show you what other residents in your locality are paying for floor furnace heat. Phone your local gas appliance dealer or talk with a representative of this company today about floor furnace heat.

Natural Gas will maintain this "Comfort Zone" at low cost



The floor plan to the left shows a typical floor furnace installation in a small home. These compact heating units rapidly circulate an abundance of warm air and are capable of heating several rooms. When of adequate size and properly installed these efficient heaters solve the problem of circulated heat for small homes at a very low cost.

Oppose Increased State Tax on Gas and Electricity

The city and county of San Francisco will be hard hit if the Legislature should incerase the present state tax on gas and electric utilities.

This was the statement today of H. Bostwick, division manager, Pacific Gas & Electric Company, whose jurisdiction extends over this section. Mr. Bostwick said:

"The proposal is to raise the tax rate on gas and electric utilities from 7.5 to 11.1 per cent of gross earnings. The state already takes $1,789,525 a year from this district in taxes, collected through gas and electric bills. If the tax rate is increased to 11.1 per cent, this amount will be raised to $2,648,497 a year, an increase of $858,972.

"The company has no income out of which to pay taxes except that which it collects in gas and electric rates. So its taxes come out of its consumers. The Railroad Commission and the courts recognize this and allow taxes in operating expenses.

"The present burden of $1,789,525 a year would seem to be enough to place upon the home-owners, farmers and storekeepers in these disturbed times. Certainly that burden can't be raised to $2,648,497 a year without increasing the hardships under which we are all struggling at this time. The danger is that the people will not realize the situation until more taxes creep into their gas and electric bills. Then it will be too late."

"So you broke your engagement to Evelyn. Why was that?"

"Well, I was only doing to the engagement what the engagment did to me,"—Buen Humor.

Lady Blanche Farm

A Romance of the Commonplace

SYNOPSIS

Motoring through Vermont, Philip Starr, young Boston architect, meets Blanche Manning, seventeen, with whom he is immediately enamored. It being a long distance to Starr's destination, Blanche suggests, the village of Hamstead not boasting a hotel, that he become, for the night, a guest of her cousin, Mary Manning. Mary receives Philip with true Vermont hospitality, and he makes the acquaintance of her cousin Paul, recognized as her fiance. Paul is inclined to be dissipated. Gale Hamlin, long a suitor for Mary's hand, visits Hamstead but makes no progress in his lovemaking. Philip, from records of the Manning family, learns the sorrowful story of the "Countess Blanche," French wife of a Revolutionary hero, Moses Manning, and of the peculiar "curse" she has transmitted to her descendants and the women of Hamstead. The evening of Philip's marriage to Blanche, Paul, under the influence of liquor, bitterly affronts Mary, and tells her their engagement is ended. Mary, at first acutely conscious of her position as a "jilted" woman, is greatly comforted by her lifelong friend, Sylvia Gray, and the love of her two small brothers. Paul, really loving Mary, though with a selfish attachment, finds life a good deal of a blank with her out of the picture. He expresses contrition and a keen desire to re-establish himself in her esteem, but Mary, disillusioned, rejects him.

Violet, having fixed a date for her visit with Blanche, decided to go to New York for a few days' shopping first. She had no intention, she said, with a slight flutter of "nerves," when Paul, who had been giving some painful attention to the subject, pointed out to her that the state of their finances was still low after his sister's wedding and that such trips and shopping were expensive, of looking "countrified" when she first went to stay at her new son-in-law's home, and to meet her daughter's new friends.

"If you had shown any consideration of me at all, we wouldn't have been so straitened!" she sobbed.

"Why, I never urged you to spend all that money."

"Don't argue with me! You know it always prostrates me to have vulgar quarrels going on. As if this wretched affair with Mary hadn't ended every hope of our having her money! And then you try to put the blame on me and accuse me of—"

"Well, I've played Mary so many dirty, mean tricks that I suppose it's natural you should think I'd use her money to pay our silly debts. I probably would have—the way things were going. But I haven't accused you of anything. I only said—"

"Oh, I know what you said, but it makes all the difference how a thing is said, and the meaning back of the saying counts still more! I suppose you'll refuse to drive me to the midnight train, next!"

Paul did not, of course, refuse to do anything of the sort. To tell the truth, he was almost glad to see his mother go. Her indolence, her extravagance, her selfishness, seemed so appalling to him just then, that he found them increasingly difficult to live with, and none the less so because he thought he saw all these qualities reflected and magnified in his own character. It was also becoming clear to him that he must either earn more—or rather earn something—or spend less, if they were to get out of debt, and that he could put considerable time to advantage in figuring out how he was to do this. He began his reflections in this direction on his way home after taking her to the station. An unusually heavy snow storm had obliged him to drive the old family horse, instead of using the new motor, and it was two o'clock in the morning when he reached home. There was, he happened to notice, a light in Mary's room. When he had put the horse up and was going from the barn to the house, he saw that it was still burning, and heard her voice at the telephone through an open window. Seth and Jane were both away, he knew, attending a Sunday school convention. Mary was therefore alone with the two little boys, and something was certainly wrong. He went up close to the house and called.

"Mary! Mary! Is anything the matter? Can I help?"

He was more frightened than before at the agonized voice that answered him.

"Yes—YES—Oh, thank God you've come!"

He pushed open the front door and bounded up the stairs. Mary was bending over the bed. And on the bed lay Algy, gasping and writhing, and then lying deathly still.

"He's got convulsions," Mary managed to say in a stifled voice. "I can't leave him a second. He might choke to death if I did."

"What am I to do first?"

"Start the kitchen fire. We'll get him into a hot bath."

Paul vanished without another word. In an incredibly short time, he was back again.

"What next?"

"See if you can get hold of a doctor. I tried, but Central was so slow in answering I didn't dare . . . Oh—Oh—" for the livid child was choking again.

There was no resident physician at the little cottage hospital. Doctor Noble, the head surgeon, lived at home. After what seemed like endless waiting, Paul got his house.

"David's with Sylvia Gray," he said a minute later, turning with a white face from the telephone. "She's very ill."

"Try Doctor Wells, then."

There was another long wait, and then again Paul faced the despair in Mary's eyes. "He's gone there, too, it's—it's a desperate case. Shall I call him up, there?"

"Yes—no— Oh, Paul, you know what the trouble is there! It's two lives, maybe, against one!"

"He might at least be able to tell us what to do."

"You'll have to try White Water—Wallacetown—any place you can think of."

Again Paul tried. One doctor was sick himself. Two had gone away to attend a medical congress. A fourth, twenty miles away, appealed to as a last resort, didn't know how he could get there—"the roads aren't broken through down this way."

"We've got to face it alone," said Mary at last.

Paul knew that it was in that moment that his selfish and idle boyhood died and that the potential manhood in him came to life.

"We've got to face it together, Mary," he said.

It was eight o'clock in the gray November morning when David Noble finally came to them. Mary was sitting in a large rocker, with Algy, a little gray shadow of the rosy child of the day before, clasped in her arms. Paul, a glass of brandy-and-water in his hand, rose from his knees beside his cousin's chair.

"Algy was all right when he went to bed last night," he stated, briefly. "He woke up in convulsions at midnight. I was passing about two o'clock and saw Mary's light. She was all alone with him till then. We've done the best we could."

David raised the child's eyelids to look at the pupils and felt his pulse while Paul was speaking. He bent over, listening intently to the little heart. Then he raised his head.

"You've saved his life," he said, with equal brevity.

A few minutes later, in the blessed sense of security that had come over her, Mary asked for Sylvia.

"She didn't get her twins, of course?" she asked, almost lightly. "She's talked of nothing else for months."

David's face contracted, and Mary noticed for the first time that he looked strangely old and very, very tired.

"Yes," he said huskily. "She did. Twin girls, just what she wanted. And—she's taken one of them back to Heaven with her."

CHAPTER X

The tragedy of Sylvia Gray's death shook Hamstead to its very foundations. Austin was almost crazed with grief. Even David, who had always had more influence over him than anyone else except Sylvia herself, could not move him.

"This won't bring her back, Austin, you know," he said, at last, as gently as ever, but more firmly. "And—and she would have been the last to—to want you to take it like this. Her courage never faltered through anything."

Austin neither answered nor moved.

"We must think what to do for the other baby. You've got her, you know, and the two little boys."

"I don't want to think of the baby."

"It isn't the baby's fault," said David, still more gently, divining what was passing in Austin's mind.

"No—but it's mine! She wasn't strong enough for this! You said yourself, when the second boy came so soon after the first, that—that she shouldn't have another for a long time."

"Yes." David chose his words carefully. "But, Austin—you came first, with Sylvia, just as she did with you. She was so brave that it was hard to get her to admit, ever, that she felt ill—that everything wasn't all right. But once she said to me, 'David, if anything should go wrong, be sure to tell Austin, afterwards, that there wasn't one minute in our life together that I would have had different—that there's no price too great to pay for perfect happiness.' She meant it. How many men's wives do you think can say that?—Mine can't," he ended, his voice breaking.

Next to Austin himself, there was no one, perhaps, in the whole village, to whom the loss of Sylvia came as such a horrible shock as to Mary. Algy was still very ill. The fear that the child would yet die, in spite of her fight for his life, grew a thousand times larger now that Sylvia's death had brought the Valley of the Shadow so close to her.

Mary did not close her eyes, nor stir from her little brother's side for three days and nights. And all that time, beside the actuality of the stricken child that she saw there, she visualized the picture of Sylvia and one little baby—of Austin and the other. And she thought—involuntarily, but constantly—of Lady Blanche's dying curse and its reiterating fulfillment. Whom would it strike next? She thought of Blanche, seemingly so secure in her radiant happiness, and trembled until her teeth chattered. The first time that Paul saw her again after the night of the double tragedy—that long night through which they had fought for the sick child together—he felt that he would gladly have given ten years of his life if he had not thrown away his right to take her in his arms and kiss away the tears and bring a little color into her white cheeks and a smile to her drawn lips. As it was, he could only venture to lay one of his hands on the two that lay so tightly clenched in her lap, and put the other gently on her shoulder.

"Don't," was all he could think of to say, all, that is, that he dared to say, his own lips quivering. "Don't Mary," and was thankful when she did not repulse him, but clung to him, sobbing, while he stroked her soft hair.

Paul was suffering, too, suffering with the revelation of truths that he had never sensed, with the facing of problems he had never solved nor tried to solve. The way that Austin loved Sylvia—was that the way men cared for women? The way that Mary loved Algy—was that the way women cared for children? Passion that was all love, love that was all self-sacrifice—what had that to do with careless sensuality, or equally careless affection? When, for the second time, David Noble sought him out, he found that the boy had already started to find him.

"What can I do to help?" Paul asked abruptly.

"There isn't much. Your Cousin Jane is proving a tower of strength to Mary by relieving her of the burden of ordinary daily grind. We men never stop to think that meals have to be cooked and dishes washed and fires built, no matter who lives or dies, do we? Everyone is trying to help Mary now. And no one in God's world can help Austin."

"Then what were you looking for me for?"

"I wanted to tell you that I thought you did darned well the night that kid almost slipped through Mary's fingers. He would have, if you hadn't been there. And also—to give you a message from Sylvia. She seemed to have a good deal of faith in you. I had a rather long talk with her about a week before she—went—and one of the things she said to me was, 'Tell Paul Manning not to stop fighting to get Mary back, if he has to die doing it.'"

"How—how am I to go about it?"

"I should think it might be rather difficult," said David dryly. "I confess it's hard for me to see the justice of a Divine Providence that snatches Sylvia from Austin who worshiped the ground she walked on, and lets you treat Mary like—"

Something in Paul's face stopped him abruptly. "Well, I suppose Providence sees a good many things we ignorant mortals don't," he ended.

"Yes," said Paul slowly, "I guess it does. Do you remember saying to me a while ago that as long as a man had a woman like Sylvia, of course he'd make her his first consideration as long as he could? Maybe the time had come for Austin to make some thing else his first consideration. Maybe he's needed a lot more in France than he realized. Perhaps it took a—a tragedy like that to show him how much he was needed."

For a moment David stared silently at the boy. He was too surprised at such conclusions reached from such a source to give utterance to speech.

"I think you're right," he said at last. "But Austin isn't the only one, you know, who's needed in France just now."

"I know," said Paul. "I've been thinking that over, too—what you said about the Foreign legion. I'll be up tomorrow night to have you look me over."

"Good for you! About eight? I shall be off myself pretty soon, now. I waited before signing up until—after Sylvia's time, because Austin begged me to do so. Well, I'll see you tomorrow night! Meanwhile, there are probably lots of little things you can find to do for Mary, if you really want to!"

As David drove away, he found he could not get Paul and his unexpected sentiments out of his mind. "Darned if I don't believe Sylvia was right about him, as usual," he reflected. "The phase that he's been passing through has been pretty unattractive, Lord knows, but it may have been just a phase. If only he hadn't lost Mary— But if he hadn't, he never would have started to think again—he was too lazy. Well, it's all beyond me."

True Wisdom

To finish the moment; to find the journey's end in each step of the road; to live the greatest number of good hours is wisdom.—Emerson.

Styria

Scene in Graz, Styria.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THE farm problem is not confined to America. Recently farmers of Styria, quiet, picturesque, Austrian valley, were unable to pay taxes and refused to allow auctioneers on their property. Tax collectors had hoped to satisfy the government's claims by selling farm stock and equipment.

Styria is both the Shenandoah valley and the Birmingham of Austria. In an Alpine country whose borders touch no salt water, Austria's city dwellers take to the grassy slopes of her tall mountains, or to rural villages tucked away in smiling valleys, when their annual playtime rolls around.

Hiking along winding mountain paths; wearing deerskin or chamois shorts, hobnailed boots, green-trimmed jackets, and hats plumed with a trophy of some other year's outing; hunting the cock-of-the-wood or other game; taking part in the rural festivals of the village, where young and old don the costume of their home town and join in the folk songs and dances; and mountain-climbing to dizzy heights on Austria's Alpine sentinels, are some of the attractions which crowd the spotless Styrian hostelries with city families holiday bent.

Hunting the chamois is the favorite sport for city dwelling Austrian and German visitors. Living in mountain fastnesses difficult of approach, the chamois are perhaps the most agile of all Europe's Alpine animals. Their pliant skin furnished the original leather of that name, and the stiff black hairs tipped with creamy yellow, which grow on the back of the animal's neck, are worn in the hat as a badge of hunting prowess. Quail, cock-of-the-wood, pheasant, partridge, and many other game birds are found in Styria and neighboring Tyrol. Tail feathers from the cock-of-the-wood also are valued as hat plumes to supplement Austrian costumes, and silver pins which hold the feathers in place are huntsmen's heirlooms, often handed down for generations.

Iron and Water Power.

Steiermark, as the Austrians call this little province astride the Niedere Tauern, straggling eastern outpost of Europe's mighty Alpine range, supplies 99 per cent of the Republic's iron needs; and, by harnessing the latent water power in its mountain streams, it provides a substitute for the missing link in Austria's chain of raw materials—coal deposits which the latter lost after the reorganization of the Austro-Hungarian empire.

From the Vordernberg-Eisenerz range, in the north of Styria, comes the bulk of the raw material for the iron works of Graz, Leoben, and Donawitz. Since the outcropping ore is of such high iron content, it is mined from the surface, not through deep shafts and chambers as is the general practice in other parts of the world. While the mines have been worked for more than twelve centuries and were once considered as the largest known deposits, their total production for all time is less than a third of the world's annual output today.

In the iron-mountain regions especially, where arsenic is a by-product of iron smelting, some peasants eat this virulent poison. It is taken in small doses, which are gradually increased as the system becomes used to it, until it may be taken daily, without visible ill effect, in a quantity sufficient to kill an average person. The arsenic is supposed to clear the complexion, increase the appetite, and improve breathing, especially for mountain climbers. Horse handlers sometimes put small quanaities in a horse's food or in his mouth to make his coat sleek and glossy and improve his wind on mountain slopes. Naturally this practice is frowned upon and discouraged by physicians.

The murmuring Mur winds across the length and breadth of Styria. Its upper reaches, especially near the neck of Austria's "panhandle," where it is fed by glacial brooks, look on a map or to the high-altitude airman like the backbone of some gigantic fish. Along its course and slender "fishbone" tributaries cluster the villages and principal cities, which seem to grow in size as the river widens, as in the case of Murau and Teufenbach, the industrial city of Leoben, and farther south, just before the river leaves Austria, Graz, the nation's second largest city and Styria's official seat of government.

Towns Along the Mur.

Straddling the Mur, Graz seems a veritable combination of Venice and Athens in miniature. Its ancient houses rise abruptly from the river's edge, suggesting the Grand canal of the romantic Italian city; while its Schlossberg and square clock tower, perched high over the city's head, dominate the skyline as the Acropolis does at Athens.

Yet, unlike either of these, Graz is primarily a manufacturing city. Here are made bicycles, wagons, machinery, Styrian champagne and beer, linen, leather goods, and iron and steel products; and here work and live many of those vacationers who frequent the country villages of the Mur valley in summer and take delight in "going native" by donning rural costumes.

In Graz there is a museum in which many a youngster would delight to linger on a rainy afternoon. Within the landeszeughaus, or arsenal, there is preserved in perfect condition enough medieval armor to outfit completely an army of 14,000 men. Spears, swords, helmets, chain mail, battle-axes, complete suits of armor—in fact, all of the equipment a well-appointed knight could desire—are kept ready to hand. But, strange as it may seem, not a single suit of armor in the museum would fit a six-footer of today, nor could an average modern man wield with ease the cumbersome weapons of that bygone age. Austrian mercenaries wore some of this armor, and much of it saw service against the Turk when Graz was one of Europe's bulwarks against Moslem invaders.

The unchanging charm of Styria lies in her small rural villages, each with its steepled church or turrented castle perched high on some rocky crag. Nestling in the lonely valleys at the feet of giant sentinels of the eastern Alps, these little towns are a world to themselves.

Dairying and Farming.

While dairying has been the principal industry of rural Styria for many generations, farming has been encouraged, because Austria today has to import large quantities of food. Agricultural schools are scattered throughout the province. Timber covers over half of Styria's area and gives work to many lumbermen, who make telegraph poles and railroad ties for export.

Across the rich bottom lands stretch rows of strange haystacks with cross-arms which resemble grotesque scarecrows. As soon as the snow leaves, in early spring, the dairy herds are turned into these fields. Then, as the weather becomes warmer and the snow recedes, the cattle are driven to higher pastures. The meadows are then used to grow hay and farm crops.

Boys and girls, usually children of the owners, tend the herds, milk the cows, make cheese, and in summer live in log cabins or flimsy chalets provided for them in mountain retreats. The milk, cheese, and butter are brought down daily, and in more favored villages are sent to the local dairy, a model of cleanliness and modern appliances.

How I Broke Into The Movies

Copyright by Hal C. Herman

By NANCY CARROLL

I REALLY kicked my way into the movies—both kinds of kicks, the kind you register to music, and the kind you register without music.

When I was a child, I had plenty of opportunity to practice as there were twelve children in our family. One day my sister and I heard that one of the Loew theaters on the East side in New York was having a dancing contest for local talent. We decided to enter and try our luck as we both could kick over our heads then.

When we reached the theater, we confessed that we were from the West side of the city, but they let us enter anyway. Much to our surprise, for we were a little nervous at our first attempts before the footlights of a big theater—we won.

Our first big show after this was the "Passing Show of 1923." Here I did a specialty number, but in one of the numbers I failed to kick as I had to hang from a chandelier. Within four weeks I was offered the leading role, opposite James Hall.

The show made ready to go on the road, and so did I, but my mother, who opposed my being on the stage, refused to let me go on the road. So I left this company and went into "Topics of 1923." Later I did a specialty number with the "Passing Show 1924," and after that I had a prominent part in "Mayflowers," kicking all the time, but to music, of course.

Then I had a chance to come West. I did not kick at that, though. My first part on the west coast was with "Nancy." In my next two shows, I had plenty of kicks for they were the "Music Box Revue" with Lupino Lane and the "Music Box" with Fannie Brice.

After that I starred in "Loose Ankles," which toured the Pacific coast. Then came the leading role in "Chicago," which was produced in Los Angeles.

Ever since I first arrived on the west coast, I had wanted to go into pictures. I finally submitted some tests to William Fox and was given the secondary lead in "Ladies Must Dress."

After I made that picture, I called at the Paramount studio in Hollywood one noon to keep a luncheon appointment with a friend of mine employed there. The guardian at the door refused to let me in. I had my appointment and I meant to keep it. I didn't see why he should not let me in, so I registered a big kick and without music, too. You see, I'm Irish and have red hair, too, so that all helped, I guess.

Anyway, when I was in the middle of the big argument, I was interrupted by Miss Anne Nichols, author of "Abie's Irish Rose." She had been passing through the foyer and stopped to see what the excitement was about. Well, I did get past that door guardian in the end, only I did not go to meet my friend. I went with Miss Nichols into her office.

She told me that I was just the type for Rosemary in her play which was to be filmed.

So you see, I did kick my way into the movies. My musical show kicks helped me to get into drama and that helped me into the movies. Plus, the musicaless kick, last of all.

Some Old Rocks

The Highlanders of the western coasts of Scotland have a short proverb: "New boat—old rocks." Do not suppose that as you in your turn essay the dangerous voyage of life you can afford to disregard the long experience of mankind. Be sure that, as Coleridge said, "Not without celestial observation can ever terrestrial charts be accurately constructed."—Henley Henson.

Scots War on Thistle

War on the national flower and emblem of Scotland is being waged in that country. The thistle has been so prolific this year that it is becoming a menace to farmers, especially along the border. Small prizes were offered to school children who brought in the largest number of thistles, and one girl gathered 5,000 plants.

LINEMEN PEFORM SURGICAL OPERATION ON INJURED DOG

Members of a P. G. and E. line crew at Nevada City performed a surgical operation on an injured dog the other day, thus giving an unusual demonstration of the value of first-aid training. Under Foreman Harry Gougher, the men were running service to the home of Harry Trowbridge when Carlo, the Trowbridge's shepherd dog, appeared with one of his forelegs so severely cut by barbed wire that the tendrons were exposed. The amateur surgeons clipped, and cleansed, and sterilized the wound; then George Rice skillfully sewed it. Carlo is now recovering.

"WHEN LADIES MEET"

Belasco and Curran, foremost producers of the West Coast, pursuant to their established policy of presenting only the outstanding New York stage hits, will offer starting Monday, February 13, at the Geary Theater, the recognized and leading comedy success of the current Broadway season, entitled "When Ladies Meet."

"When Ladies Meet" has been acclaimed by all the New York City critics, as the best play ever written by America's most conscientious dramatist, Rachel Crothers, who has had over thirty plays produced on Broadway. It is a smart, up-to-the-minute comedy, highly amusing and in spots racy and frank.

Kay Johnson, one of our favorite actresses, will portray the role of a novelist and Catherine Doucet has been brought from the East to play the leading comedienne. Miss Doucet originated the lead in Miss Crothers' last comedy hit in New York, "As Husbands Go." Tom Douglas, a popular juvenile of the Manhattan stage, who created the lead opposite Dorothy Gish in the successful play, "Young Love", and who played the lead in "Fata Morgana" in London, has been engaged for the romantic lead.

Edgar MacGregor, director of Belasco and Curran's "Vinegar Tree" and "The Cat and the Fiddle," is directing the cast, which he claims will excel that now being seen in New York in this "mirthquake."

Belasco and Curran promise to make of this first production of "When Ladies Meet", outside of New York, one of the most important and delightful events of the theatrical year in California. This attraction follows "Another Language," now playing in the Geary Theater, which closes Saturday night, February 11.

BACK FROM THE TOMB

A weird story concerning the mother of General Robert E. Lee is told by Warfield Lee, of Cattlesburg, Ky., a grandnephew of the famous chieftain. While the incident he relates is not mentioned in historical works, he declares it to be true.

It is said that Mrs. Lee apparently died after a long illness in 1806 and after lying in state in the home for several days the body was placed in the family mausoleum. On the seventh day after her supposed death the sexton entered the vault to lay flowers on the casket when he heard faint calls of "Help, help, help." He rushed from the tomb, but later returned, after deciding that what he had heard was only imagined sounds.

While strewing the flowers over the glass lid of the coffin he saw the lips of Mrs. Lee quiver; restoratives were administered and her rapid recevery followed.

Fifteen months later Robert E. Lee, who was to become the idol of the South, was born. His mother lived until 1829, the year in which Lee graduated from West Point.

If the story is true it shows how near the world came to being deprived one of its noblest characters. It also illustrates what caution should be exercised to prevent the possibility of burying anyone alive.

Football's most amazing touchdown record was made by "Red" Grange, playing for Illinois in a game against Michigan in November, 1924. He handled the ball only five times and made five touchdowns, four of them in the first quarter and the other in the fourth. His runs were 95, 67, 56, 45 and 15 yards respcetively.

Judge Loevering of St. Paul believes that the punishment should fit the crime and proceeded accordingly when four boys were brought before him charged with sending in five false alarms for the thrill of seeing the engines run. He sentenced them to four hours each polishing up the fire apparatus.

"How did you find things down on the farm this summer? Crops good, I hope."

"Well, father did fairly good on his barbecue sandwich stand, but he just about broke even on his gasoline and oil."—Hudson Star.

Joe: "How come you go steady with Eloise?"

Hal: "She's different from other girls."

"How is that?"

"She's the only girl who will go with me."

Some of the dry Congressmen say the revenue from beer will amount to "only $125,000,000." When $125,000,000 is referred to as "only," usually it is taxpayers' money and a Congressman speaking.—Macon Telegraph.

One trouble with the new deal on war debts is that European nations want to pick their own hands.

TWO CLASSES OF TRAFFIC VIOLATORS

Robbins B. Stoeckel, Motor Vehicle Commissioner of Connecticut, divides traffic violators into two classes—the inadvertent violator, and the "automobile criminal."

The inadvertent driver means to be careful and competent, but he is congentially a poor driver, or is slow in his reactions, or is absent minded, or is easily distracted from the business of operating his car. Because of him, many severe accidents occur. The solution in his case is a licensing authority which passes on every driver's fitness, refusing those who are mentally or physically incapable of safe driving, no matter how good their intentions may be.

The automobile criminal presents an entirely different problem. He may be a good and competent driver in all respects except one—deliberate disregard for the rights and safety of others. In his case, intent—the old arbiter of any criminal act—is present. He drives recklessly or under the influence of intoxicants. He runs away after accidents. His punishment must be certain and severe if he is to be cured.

On the other hand are inadvertent violators, who should be helped and do not belong in the courts—on the other, the intentionally dangerous, who are a real menace to public safety. Mr. Stoeckel suggests that legislation recognize these factors, and his ideas should be given serious consideration in every state as a constructive step toward solving the problem of automobile accidents.

CANADIAN GIRL PIONEER

In these days, when apparently no limit is set on the ambitions of women looking for a "career," it is not surprising to find them engaged in unusual activities in unusual places. Among those who have left the beaten path seeking adventure and fortune, few have displayed greater pluck and enthusiasm than Miss Kathleen Rice, a native of St. Mary's, Ontario.

Miss Rice, an honor graduate of Toronto University, found school teaching too prosaic and about four years ago set out for northern Manitoba, 400 miles north of Winnipeg, where she homesteaded a quarter-section farm, cleared land and built her own cottage.

Later she took to prospecting for minerals and has staked out a number of promising claims, with apparently great potential wealth in gold, copper, nickel, zinc and vanadium. She now lives on an island in Herb Lake, seven miles from the nearest community, where she traps and hunts in winter and prospects in summer. No phase of pioneering is foreign to her experience.

If Miss Rice's object was to get away from the monotony of being comfortable, she has certainly accomplished her purpose.

HENRY GRADY'S ADVICE

Henry W. Grady, the great Southern editor and orator, died forty-three years ago, but the advice he gave to the farmers of his native Georgia and the South many years ago is as sound today as it was when it was uttered.

One particular gem of his which has been often republished is of particular significance just now. It applies equally to North or South, provided the principal money crop of any particular section be subsituted for "cotton," where it occures in the original. Grady said:

"When every farmer in the South shall eat bread from his own fields and meat from his own pastures, and distributed by no creditor and enslaved by no debt, shall sit among his teeming gardens and orchards and vineyards and dairies and barnyards, pitching his crops in his own wisdom and growing them in independence, making cotton his clean surplus and selling it in his own time and in his chosen market and not at a master's bidding—getting his pay in cash and not a receipted mortgage that discharges his debt but does not restore his freedom—then shall be breaking the fullness of our day."

Perhaps those South American republics are cutting up because they don't want to see Japan and China get all the publicity.

EASY FOR THE QUACKS

The ease with which charlatans of all kinds, particularly medical quacks, defraud the public would be incredible were it not for the evidences to be seen on every hand. A few of the schemes whereby the gullible and superstitious have been separated from their money by these swindlers are mentioned in an article by Dr. Morris Fishbein.

Soon after Franklin made his famous kite demonstration in electricity, everyone was discussing the wonderful new force. A doctor named Elisha Perkins manufactured a lot of short metal rods, which he claimed were charged with electricity, and therefore capable of drawing disease from the human body. He sold many of the rods—one pair to George Washington.

Electric belts and similar appliances have been sold by the millions, not one of which, of course, had any curative value whatever. A few years ago a widely advertised product called Sanatogen had an enormous sale, and testimonials were obtained from many persons of prominence. The stuff was composed of 95 per cent cottage cheese and the remainder glycerine phosphates, neither of any medical value.

One promoter acknowledged making $45,600 profit in a year from the sale of a "chemical ring," supposed to cure diseases of the blood, but in reality no more efficacious than a twine string tied around one's finger.

But we can hardly wonder at the success of quackery in a state of civilization which still accepts a mass of superstition as gospel truth.

SENSE AND SPEED

It has been rather well established that laws which arbitrarily fix speed limits for automobiles are but little protection against accidents. The speed at which one may safely drive depends upon the road and traffic conditions involved.

A high executive of one of the leading automobile manufacturing companies, who has made a close study of speed in its relation to accidents, declares that 50 or even 60 miles an hour over good open roads in the country may be safer than 15 miles an hour in cutting corners in town.

The safe driver is not necessarily the slow driver, but one who uses common sense whether driving fast or slow. Careless driving while turning corners, passing pedestrians or other cars, crossing railroad tracks, and maneuvering in congested traffic, is the greatest menace to life and limb.

Sense, not speed, is the important factor in determining whether a driver is safe or unsafe.

HYPNOTIZING BOOZERS

Another solution of the liquor problem has been advanced by Professor Bechteriev, a Russian psychiatrist, who claims that he has cured many drunkards through the employment of hypnotism.

His method, as reported in the Paris Times, is to take his patients in groups, lecture them on the evils of strong drink, then hypnotize them while continuing his admonitions. When they awake he gives them certain auto-suggestive phrases to be repeated by them several times daily for a month, at the end of which time he says they are cured of the desire for liquor.

That would seem to be a fine system if it would really work. But in this country it might have a tendency to aggravate the unemployment situation. Both bootleggers and reformers would find themselves without jobs.

UNEMPLOYED WORKERS SEEK IMMEDIATE RELIEF

Several hundred unemployed workers in San Mateo county descended upon the supervisorial chamber in Redwood City last Monday afternoon and demanded that they be given immediate relief. They accused the board of supervisors of failing to provide adequate relief for the unemployed and said that many of their members were being deprived of work on bond issue projects because of discrimination.

After hearing their demand the supervisors assured them that they would do everything in their power to bring relief. Spokesmen for the unemployed warned the board that they could expect trouble unless relief was forthcoming.

A desire to aid the unemployed and all others in straitened financial circumstances was given as the reason for the extension.

Husband: "O. K. I'm in no rush."

Ma: "What's the matter, Jack?"

Jack: "Papa hit his finger with a hammer."

Ma: "Oh, don't cry about that; you should laugh."

Jack: "I—I did."

When it's Coal, say ABERDEEN. That means the best.

"Doesn't anybody know anything about this car?" asked the stalled motorist in exasperation.
